FANGORIA recently took some time to sit down with Mary Magdalan, a high-energy hybrid band made up of three passionate, extreme people who literally live for their music. Fronted by Mary Magdalan herself, the band is an outlet for her former self. From junkie to rock star, this band is ready for listeners to not only understand them, but to help listeners understand themselves. DIGINERV, Mary Magdalan's latest album, will hit stores this summer just in time for some much needed backyard barbeque music.

FANGORIA: So why the name Mary Magdalan?

MARY MAGDALAN: I feel like it was meant for me. It's like when the heavy guy in your neighborhood gets the word "Big" in front of his name, like "Big" Mike or "Big" Worm. It just fits them. Mary Magdalan spoke to me the first second I thought of it. It just fit me.

FANG: How would you describe your sound to someone who has never heard of you?

MAGDALAN: I would run up as close as I could to them and I would scream bloody hell in their ear. Then I would kiss them on the cheek. Basically we are the sour patch kids of music.

No really, our sound is your iPod on drugs. Or your dog on drugs. Or your mom on drugs. Or maybe you're on drugs and you lost your IPod. Or your dog. Or your mom. BTW, have you seen my iPod? It was just here…

[redacted]