Continuing our interview with HOLLISTON co-creator/co-star Adam Green (begun here), we chat to him about projects (including HATCHET 3) he has coming up past the FEARnet sitcom, which premieres Wednesday, April 4…

FANGORIA: Let’s talk HATCHET 3 for a bit. Did you personally choose BJ McDonnell as the franchise’s new director?

ADAM GREEN: Yeah, he was my first choice. I really wanted to keep it within the HATCHET family and make sure it was someone who’d been there since day one. BJ had literally shot every frame of both HATCHET movies [as camera operator], he’s always wanted to be a director, and one thing I love about BJ is that he never asked for anything. Whenever you start to get any kind of success, everyone from people you never met to family members start asking for stuff, as if you can wave a magic wand and make anything happen. But I always knew BJ wanted to direct, and it was really great once we had all the discussions internally and I got to bring it up to him, because he totally didn’t expect it and was so appreciative. And now it’s gonna feel like the first movie again for the crew, where you have a new director who’s so passionate and thrilled about making a movie. For him, this is the most important thing in the world, and while going over the script, I was able to kinda feed off of all his excitement.

[redacted]