Written by Samuel Zimmerman
Tuesday, 24 January 2012 08:27

Relativity is shuffling some of their 2012 films a bit.

The upcoming Jennifer Lawrence-starring HOUSE AT THE END OF THE STREET, once due out in April, is now bowing this September 21. The film, which sees a young girl (Lawrence) and her mom (Elisabeth Shue) move to a new town and learn their house is across the street from a the past scene of a double murder. Things get spooky when the teen girl gets close with the surviving son (Max Thieriot).

Another one of Relativity's slate, the John Cusack-as-Edgar Allan Poe mystery THE RAVEN is also taking flight to only a month later on April 27. Here's the synopsis:

"When a mother and daughter are found brutally murdered in 19th century Baltimore, Detective Emmett Fields (Luke Evans) makes a startling discovery: the crime resembles a fictional murder described in gory detail in the local newspaper—part of a collection of stories penned by struggling writer and social pariah Edgar Allan Poe. But even as Poe is questioned by police, another grisly murder occurs, also inspired by a popular Poe story."

"Realizing a serial killer is on the loose using Poe’s writings as the backdrop for his bloody rampage, Fields enlists the author’s help in stopping the attacks. But when it appears someone close to Poe may become the murderer’s next victim, the stakes become even higher and the inventor of the detective story calls on his own powers of deduction to try to solve the case before it’s too late."