I want to get off a few good Juans before giving you the lowdown on this Cuban zombie film, but I have a feeling it will go in Juan ear and out the other. On the Juan hand, I love bad puns, but on the other, most people don't. Will JUAN OF THE DEAD Juan up SHAUN OF THE DEAD? Probably not. However, you can read up on Cuba's foray into the zombie film craze. But I think we all know by now—you've seen Juan zombie flick, you've seen them all.

Quiet Earth reports that JUAN DE LOS MUERTOS, as it's known in its homeland, is a co-production between Spain, Mexico and Cuba, and it's set to begin shooting this September. Here's the translated synopsis:

"Juan is a typical 40-year-old slacker. One day, Havana begins to fill with zombies, and Juan decides that the best way to cope with it is to prosper. 'Juan of the dead, killed their loved ones' is his slogan, and his mission is to help people get rid of those infected around them…for a price. But the situation gets worse, and while everyone is out to sea to get away, Juan is left with no choice but to become a hero, staying to defend their country and protect their own on an island turned into a bloodbath."

This could be Juan heck of a movie, right!

{jcomments on}