Written by Samuel Zimmerman
Thursday, 24 March 2011 10:46

COLD SWEAT (SUDOR FRIO) director Adrian Garcia Bogliano is gearing up to show the world one of his earlier movies at this year's Amsterdam Fantastic Film Festival, and while it doesn't seem as polished, his interest in achieving a particularly Argentinean point of view looks to remain intact. Check out MASSACRE, TONIGHT!

Dread Central premiered the poster and trailer for the film (you can see the clip over there). MASSACRE, TONIGHT (MASACRE ESTA NOCHE) looks to have a seriously rough veneer, but that seems appropriate in the context of its snuff-film subject matter. Here's the synopsis:

"A young screenwriter gets a job replacing a cameraman who disappeared during the production of a mysterious new film. Once there, he finds himself surrounded by a bunch of strange folks including a porn actor and his foolish girlfriend. But the real question is…who is that man with that strange mask on? To his absolute shock, our hero discovers that he has accidentally ended up on the set of a snuff-film, and the odds aren't looking good that he'll survive the night."

Bogliano's COLD SWEAT just premiered at Austin's SXSW. Check out Fango's quite positive review ! The Amsterdam Fantastic Film Festival takes place April 13-23, and you can find more about that here
.

{jcomments on}