Set in the middle of the Vietnam War, ’68 #3 (Image Comics) is an unforgettable tale about the extremely hostile nature of combat and horror. Far away from home, a platoon of American soldiers finds themselves losing their humanity in the never-ending jungles. Is there anything to go back home to, especially when the zombie infestation has spread to the states?
Well-deserving of much attention and high praise, each issue of ’68 continues to get better and better!

Carrying his injured sergeant, a young and naive soldier, Yam, travels deep into the heart of darkness. Trained to hate their enemy, Yam and his sergeant argue over what they’re really fighting about. After discovering a pile of dead children, all shot in the head, the sergeant truly believes it takes an animal to kill innocent infants. Sympathetic in his grief, Yam hopes the kids were at least shown mercy, as their enemy is running scared of the zombies.

[redacted]