With a clever premise to build upon, SCREAMLAND #3 (Image Comics) lives up to its full potential by delivering tons of scares and laughs. There’s a killer on the loose, prowling the booths at a horror convention. When you have a room full of movie monsters, who do you begin to suspect? Where do you even start with such a long list? As the murder mystery unspools, the story becomes a satirical look at Hollywood and popular culture.

Before he could finally reveal what his secret footage contained, Izzy, The Invisible Man, was found dead in a pool of his own blood. It seems that someone at the horror convention wants to keep that secret hidden at all costs. Carl, a heavy and drunken Wolf Man, and Travis, a retired actor, appoint themselves to solve the murder, but the only real detective work these two has-beens have done comes from past television gigs.

[redacted]