Joe Dante talks "MONSTER LOVE" storyline

Written by Justin Beahm Wednesday, 02 March 2011 11:25

Speaking exclusively to Fango, director Joe Dante gave Fango the scoop on plot details for MONSTER LOVE, his much-buzzed-about new project. As first reported here, the Greg Pak-scripted horror/comedy is targeting a fall start date.

"It's essentially ROMERO AND JULIET," Dante tells us. "You have a group of werewolves who are running wild in Paris, equal parts skater boys and soccer hooligans. The leader of the pack is Pete, the hero, and he encounters Maggie, this modern age tomgirl dressing in black boots and a leather jacket who also happens to be a vampire. They have an encounter in the park one night and fall in love. Maggie is from an older, European, more upper-class group of vampires who don't approve, and the other werewolves don't approve, so our heroes have to go through a lot of machinations to try to stay together." The result: an all-out war between the werewolves and the vampires. Look for more details in Fango #303, on sale next month!

{jcomments on}