The controversial shocker A SERBIAN FILM is now available for viewing via the FlixFling on-line service (with theatrical bookings continuing as well), and we've got a sweet prize pack to give out to one lucky winner.

This prize pack contains:

Three free months' subscription to FlixFling

One free rental of A SERBIAN FILM (via FlixFling, and good for the free subscription period)

A SERBIAN FILM poster

Filmmaker Srdjan Spasojevic pushes the boundaries of what can (or should) be shown on screen in this violent and sexually graphic thriller. Milos (Srdjan Todorovic) was once a star in pornographic movies, well-known for his ability to perform longer than any of his peers, but he gave up his career and now lives a quiet life with his wife and young son. Milos has been having serious money problems and wants to better provide for his family, so when an old friend tells him about a wealthy filmmaker who'd like to work with him, he's willing to listen. Vukmir (Sergej Trifunovic) is a mysterious man who offers to pay Milos a huge sum to appear in his next film—enough to support his family for life. Milos agrees, even though Vukmir won't tell him what the movie is about. Not long after Milos arrives on set, he realizes this will not be an ordinary porn film, and as he's dosed with drugs and led from one extreme of sex, violence and human debasement to another, Milos becomes aware that his physical and emotional survival is being put to the ultimate test.
